Spirit of America and the World is a collection of photographs taken in America and around the World, in black-and-white. Great things can come from small packages, and the strength of the sparrow is as important as the fierceness of the eagle and lion. And people of various types come into view here, too, though we all have a strong interest in keeping peace in our World. John Loengard's masterful cover photo from Alaska suggests the power of simply presented interests here, and their great beauty, as well.

SPIRIT OF AMERICA AND THE WORLD

PREFACE

by David J. Marcou,

This Book-Series's Director/Editor

St. Paul wrote: 'If I have all faith so as to move mountains, but do not have love, I am nothing.' This group photobook, modest in size and black-and-white, speaks to our love of God and Humanity. Our environments and spirit are also key; they too relate to the love and life in and around us. Realizing the AWP Press isn't a large-scale publisher, our power resides in mobility and flexible strength, like the sparrow as much as the eagle, which is strong in beak and can fly away in an instant, but holds its own, to a degree, when buffeted by winds of change. As St. Matthew suggested, God's eye is on the small sparrow, as on every created thing.

I learned that well in the 'Land of Morning Calm' from the Sims, the Yis, and David Johns, even titling one of my magazine stories, about a small car rental firm, 'The Strength of the Sparrow.' There are stories about tigers in Korea, too, and Koreans can be as fierce as tigers, or eagles. But I also sensed what newsman Charles Kuralt said Finns call sisu, and Brits call pluck. Sparrows and Koreans do not give up easily, nor do many peoples of interest. This book depends on many peoples, especially Americans, and our own brands of persistence, with the gist of stories related in photos, for America is still a great idea and place, for the world, despite what some criticize it for. A sense of humor helps, too.

Here, we thank God, our families, friends, co-creators, subjects, consultants, production/print staff, conservators, sellers, reviewers, readers, mentors, menders, and sponsors, like Don and La Vonne Zietlow, Dan and Vicky Kunz, Bishop Jerome Listeki, Sue Vlasak, Dan and Alice Kapanke, Carl and Nelda Liebig, Tom and Joy Marcou, Mike and Mary Temp, and introducer/contributor Jon Tarrant, former editor of the British Journal of Photography.

INTRODUCTION

by Jon Tarrant,

A Noted Author and Former Editor of the British Journal of Photography.

Photography was never meant to be ephemeral: and it was the need to fix an image permanently on paper that provided photography's first technical challenge. Digital photography has changed that, but it's hoped good digital images will still be made lasting.

There has always been an optimum moment at which to capture a photo, whether it is when a model looks most engaging or as a high-jumper glides over the bar — photographs are idealized remnants, 'decisive moments'. But when images are seen on screens before drifting into the mists of time, perhaps never being printed, it remains crucial we continue to compile collections of pictures documenting real life.

The days of the discovered shoe-box — encapsulating a family's marriages, births, holidays, celebrations and achievements — are fast receding, robbing future social historians of a wealth of everyday materials. Glossy coffee-table books from big-name photographers/agencies do not include these types of images, because the lives they document seem unexceptional. It's likely Picture Post great Bert Hardy, who had to first work long and hard as a freelancer, and his peers would experience huge frustration finding publishers, if they were young photographers today. This book would have welcomed Hardy and mates with open arms, but how many other books like this are still being published?

You hold in your hands a piece of history; a record of contemporary life that follows in a long-established but now disappearing tradition. Treasure this book, for it is a vision of the present for people yet to come; people who we hope will regard our seemingly unexceptional todays as valuable yesterdays.
